

The world's simplest service contract

My service contract is fair and openly and honestly communicated. When you book me, you agree to the following terms:

We (that's you and your partner) have read, we understood and we agree with the following points of awesomeness:

That full payment is required four months after the booking and/or before one month before the ceremony whichever is sooner.

And that the $400 retainer is required to secure our wedding date and time, as is payment within the specified due date of the invoice.

All payments, retainers and deposits made are non-refundable.

We agree to complete a NOIM (notice of intended marriage) in the required legal time and to supply our celebrant with necessary identification to prove identity and date and place of birth.

We are both over 18, not related (in a way that makes it an invalid marriage), not already married, and are totally consenting to the marriage.

We agree to communicate all of our expectations so we can have the most awesome wedding a service contract would ever allow us to have.

We are booking Brendan Anning for a minimum one hour and maximum two hour period on our wedding day unless otherwise agreed upon in writing. This time begins at least 30 minutes before the time booked above and ends at the earliest, 30 minutes after the time booked above. As a normal courtesy the celebrant will be an hour early and stay for an hour but in the event of natural disaster, bride or groom being late, there may be restrictions on time. If a party to the ceremony is more than 30 minutes late they realise that they are risking the Brendan's presence at the ceremony if he has other appointments that day.
